J. N. FREE. Bill

Nothing is over permanently gaine i by English ordinance offers a bribe for the acceptance of Lecompton, so also did the amendments of Mr. Crittenden and Mr. Montgomery, for the amount of lands granted by the two fatter was exactly the same as that proposed in the English bill They omit, however, this material fact, viz: that Mr. English's contrivance offers to the people of Kansas this land onton; but if they reject it, they are to have neither lands nor admission into the Union at present, nor have they any assurance that they shall have any dowry of lands under any other constitution they may present in the future. Mr. Crittenden the ablest and most fair-minded Senator from the South, in fact, argued that the rejection of the English ordinance by the people of Kansas would be set up as "an estoppel"—a barrier "against their ever having any more land." This, therefore, renders the English proposition a poses, lowever plausible, can make the people see it in any other light. The Crittenden-Montgomery proposiion was essentially different. It referred the Lecompton Constitution itself-not the land ordinance-to the people of Kanof grave legislation. If the constitution were rejected, authority was given to form a new one at once, present it to the people for ratification and come into the Union with the same population, while the English bill requires a population for the English bill requires a popu admission more than double as large under any other constitution, as it does under Lecompton. This is "asserting" and PHE GOLDEN PRIZE "vindicating popular sovereignty" with a vengeance!-offering a bribe for its exercise in one way, and a penalty for its exercise in another! We shall probably be consured in some junters for talking thus freely, but we an't help it.
